NOTE—Miss Lyne is the only star in either the Chicago-Philadelphia or Boston Opera companies to be paid for unfulfilled operatic engagements this year in order to hold her contract for next season.

Miss Lyne is under contract with Henry Russell, impresario of the Boston Opera Company, for operatic engagements next year, and it is only due to the fact that the Boston Opera Company was disbanded this year, on account of the war, that makes Miss Lyne's visit to Honolulu possible.

TRADE POSSIBILITIES OF CHINA EMPHASIZED IN BROCKMAN'S TALK

Hands-Around-Pacific Dinner
Hears of Industrial and Social Mingling

Strongly interesting were the statements concerning U. S. trade possibilities with China made by Fletcher S. Brockman at the Hands-Around-Pacific gathering last night at the Outrigger Club.

"Through the action of the Allies, our trade with Austria, Germany and Turkey has been cut off," he said, "but that trade has ever been infinitesimal in comparison with what we might have with China if we would only reach out and take it. Suppose we should find manufacturers in America who would make it their business to put a 50-cent pocket knife in the hands of every man in China. Why, the return would be quadrupled in dollars to anything we have received from Austria during a year. Suppose our manufacturers of the fountain pen would place one of these instruments in the hands of every Chinaman, the return would amount to twice as much as the value of our annual total trade with Germany. Presume that our manufacturers of lead pencils would sell a five-cent pencil to each and every citizen of China, the return would be more than double the value of our last year's trade with Turkey. Our trade possibilities with China are astounding."

"Could we sell to every Chinese what we now sell to every Cuban, America would draw an annual income from China of nearly $11,000,000,000, or every year more than $150 in the pocket of each man, woman and child in the United States. Someone said to me, 'Why, that's remote and absolutely impossible.' Why, instead of being remote, it doesn't even begin to suggest the actual possibilities, and China is urgently inviting Americans to come over and investigate the dawn possibilities in a land where half a billion people are emerging and bounding from an economic and industrial suppression that lasted for four thousand years, and has suddenly come to an end. China is building great factories. She is wonderfully developing and improving her silk industry; iron manufacturing plants are springing up in a number of the provinces. She has coal and iron deposits that will last the world for ten thousand years, and these she is now ready to open and develop and she asks the assistance of Americans in doing this."

"The Hands-Around-Pacific work here in Hawaii can be made of the greatest importance to both China and to America. Sooner or later the great men of all Pacific lands pass through Honolulu and meet your leading men. They leave messages that are delivered to others, and this should be the clearing-house and educational experimental station that will make the people of the Pacific understand each other and know what each other has to offer. The movement started here should grow in wider and widening circles. Already in China we have taken an interest in the Hands-Around-Pacific work, and it will have our hearty co-operation. China has more to offer under the new republic than has all the other countries of the Pacific. Send this message forth around the Great Ocean!"

Mr. Brockman was the first of the 20 speakers from 20 different Pacific countries who were the guests of the Mid-Pacific Magazine. Jack London followed the first speaker and said feelingly that people here are making no real effort in Hawaii to understand each other, but like so many tribes, studying each others' tribal language, which none of the others understood. He advised getting together and studying each others' tribal language. To illustrate what he meant by "tribal language" he told a story of his own childhood.

H. L. Strange followed with a story of his childhood, when he was at school in France near the border of Switzerland, Germany and Italy. This was not long after the Prussian war. He told how the French hated the Germans, and how every year the Germans would come to help the French gather their crops, and the French would go over the border line to help their neighbors, the Germans, gather their crops of grain. "I used to listen to the French denouncing the Germans," he said, "and telling how they hated them, and then I would say, 'But there is Swaburg, he comes over and helps you every season and you like him,' and then there would be a chorus of 'Oh, if all the Germans were like Swaburg we would like the Germans.' And so each would say of the German whom he knew who had helped him, and they didn't know that all the Germans were like Swaburg. They hated the Germans whom they had created in their own minds—Germans that never did and never will exist, but they loved the Germans whom they did know, but they had not gone far enough in the study of the tribal language, that was all."

L. A. Thurston challenged any one present to state that he knew five of the leading Japanese business men by sight and name. Lorrin Andrews was the only one who accepted the challenge. Mr. Thurston went on to say that it was the duty of the business men of Honolulu to know something more than they do of the business men and methods of those about them, who represent the great commercial countries of the Pacific. He urged that the Hands-Around-Pacific Club begin in a small way to have its members become personally acquainted with the leading Chinese and Japanese and others in Hawaii who speak another tribal language, and see if we might not come to understand each other, and then enlarge the circle until it would send out ripples and waves that might finally sweep across the ocean and touch the other shores of the Pacific.

The other speakers, and each country of the Pacific was represented, followed this lead, and it was decided to hold a series of small dinners at first, at which those interested in learning the tribal language of those about them might take up the study, and that, as members of the other tribes were brought in and their language understood, people from additional tribes would be invited, and their language learned, so that in time in Hawaii there would be one organization in which all of the tribal languages of the Pacific would be mutually understood, and the fundamental misunderstandings minimized.

TEA BUYERS GOING TO ORIENT ARE ON SHINYO

The annual invasion of tea-buyers representing importing firms throughout the United States has begun. Twenty-one of them are en route to Japan, China and India in the Toyo Kisen Kaisha liner Shinyo Maru that today called at Honolulu after an uneventful trip from San Francisco.

Captain W. C. T. S. Filmer is in command of the liner. He has relieved Captain Stanley Smith, who has been assigned to the South American liner Anyo Maru. Captain Filmer is on the reserve staff of the T. K. K. He is the son of Commodore W. E. Filmer of the fleet, who now resides at Southampton.

The Shinyo is carrying a heavy cargo for delivery to Japan and China. Large shipments of cotton, automobiles, agricultural machinery and general merchandise filled the hold of the vessel.

Otis A. Poole, dean of the emissaries of commerce heads the list of tea-buyers who practically monopolize the Shinyo. Poole said today that he was making his 59th trip across the Pacific. He is looked upon as a kamaaina by Honoluluans.

The Shinyo Maru left San Francisco with a few layover passengers for Honolulu. The through list includes 73 cabin, 100 second class and 142 Asiatic steerage passengers. The vessel will visit Manila on the home ward voyage.

Among the travelers to the Far East are B. M. Webb, a merchant of Hongkong, and wife; Mrs. Julius Reis, wife of the manager of the firm of Erlanger & Gallinger of Manila, and F. C. Hogg, bound for Formosa.

The Shinyo brought more than 300 sacks of mail. It will be despatched to the Orient at 5 o'clock this evening.
